

I feel it is against all reasonable argument to say that the word "Fuck" should be allowed to be used over the public airways except in instances of a brief such as this. I realize that when speaking of the word itself, you have to use it. In any other situation there are other words that can be used to convey the same idea fully. It is not a violation of free speech to expect people to be able to communicate without dragging others through a cesspool of verbal expletives. Freedom also demands an amount of restraint in respect to those around you. Freedom is not a license to demean and demoralize others from a lack of public concern. I believe and protect the freedom to be yourself in your own home as long as it does not damage the personal rights of others. If there are groups of people who want language such as this filling their conversations, let them get together and show themselves to be the majority or else form a broadcasting corporation that can pipe into their private environment these vile and negative expletives. It is not freedom of speech to force on public airways speech that is lowly and gutteral at best.